Eddie Condon's was the name of three successive jazz venues in New York run by jazz banjoist, guitarist, and bandleader Eddie Condon from 1945 until the mid-1980s. In 1975, Red Balaban took over the management of the club. Ed Polcer was also a part-owner at the time of the club's closing. Tony Parenti, Wild Bill Davison, and Eddie Condon take a break at Eddie Condon's of New York City in June 1946 Pee Wee Russell, Max Kaminsky, Wild Bill Davison, Jack Lesberg, George Brunies, Bud Freeman, and Fr

Eddie Condon's Treasury of Jazz (1956) was a collection of articles co-edited by Condon and Richard Gehman. A latter-day collaborator, clarinetist Kenny Davern, described a Condon gig: "It was always a thrill to get a call from Eddie and with a gig involved even more so. I remember eating beforehand with Bernie (Previn, trumpet) and Lou ...

Reproduction is prohibited. A leading figure in the "Chicago School" of early Dixieland jazz, Eddie Condon was a popular jazz banjoist, guitarist and bandleader. Active on the jazz scene since the 1920s, he also ran his own jazz club in New York from 1945 through 1967 and recorded many now-classic jazz albums with other greats of his era.

Few jazzmen active during the mid-'50s were more worthy of recording tributes to the era of classic jazz, just three decades distant, than Eddie Condon. Fitting, then, that two of his most interesting throwback dates, Bixieland and Eddie Condon's Treasury of Jazz, were combined for this Collectables two-fer. The first includes ten of Bix Beiderbecke's most popular features from the man who ...
