University of Aberdeen In Etienne Gilson's series of twenty lectures, he aims to show that mediæval philosophy is the Christian philosophy par excellence. Lecture I asks, How can a philosophy be Christian? Philosophy, qua philosophy, depends on proper method in the use of reason in light of self-evident principles.

The Spirit of Medieval Philosophy - The Gifford Lectures

Gilson's work shows the importance of two terminological cate- gories that build the foundations of his interpretation of the history of philosophy: "Christian philosophy," and "medieval philosophy." The first of them is controversial. Some scholars agree to use it, but only conditionally.

Gilson evidently took deep offense at the cliché that Medieval philosophy is merely imitation pagan philosophy. Using all his academic prowess, he radically de-bunks that myth, and presents an intricate system of thought guided by faith and grounded in reason which far surpasses the reach of Aristotle and Plato.
