The Flower Seller

The Flower Seller was painted in 1941 and depicts a young woman kneeling with a very large bundle of calla lilies. Her clothes are simple yet she is colorfully and neatly like a typical young woman of Mexico in the early 20th century. The double braids in her hair indicate that she is a young girl not yet married.

The Flower Seller by Diego Rivera

The Flower Seller is a fascinating story of a young woman's descent from luxury to rural poverty after her beloved papa's death. The openness and honesty of Isabella draws the reader in as they share her struggles to adjust to an alien lifestyle and family who at first she seems to have no common connection.

similarities among Rivera's flower seller paintings is the anonymity of the human figures. In the 1942 work, the figure is facing forward, yet she bows her head and closes her eyes. It looks like she is steeling herself to shoulder a heavy burden. The huge bundle of oversized lilies dwarfs her human figure.
